What You Should Know About Insurance Coverage for Kids Who Need Wigs

Why hair loss matters to kids:

- About 10,000 U.S. kids age 14 and under will get a cancer diagnosis in 2015.¹
- Many children undergoing cancer treatment, or as a result of other medical conditions such as alopecia or burns, will lose their hair.
- Medical insurance plans cover prosthetics for children, but not cranial hair prosthetics – wigs.
- Wigs sold in stores are usually for adult heads so they are too big for kids, and can cost hundreds or thousands of dollars.²
- Some families don't live near an organization that offers free wigs, or can't travel with their child to a city to find an organization.
- Children with hair loss often don't like what they see in the mirror, and their self-esteem can suffer.
- Sometimes they are victimized and bullied at school.
- A wig can make all the difference in the world for these kids and help them feel good about themselves again.

Legislation to help kids has been introduced:

House Bill 4358, sponsored by Rep. Kevin Hertel (D-St. Clair Shores), would make sure these kids get the wigs they need. The Bill would require insurers to cover human or synthetic hair replacements for children under the age of 19 who have experienced hair loss as a result of a medical condition or the treatment of a medical condition. The bill mandates that insurance coverage for wigs cannot be less than coverage offered for any other prosthesis.

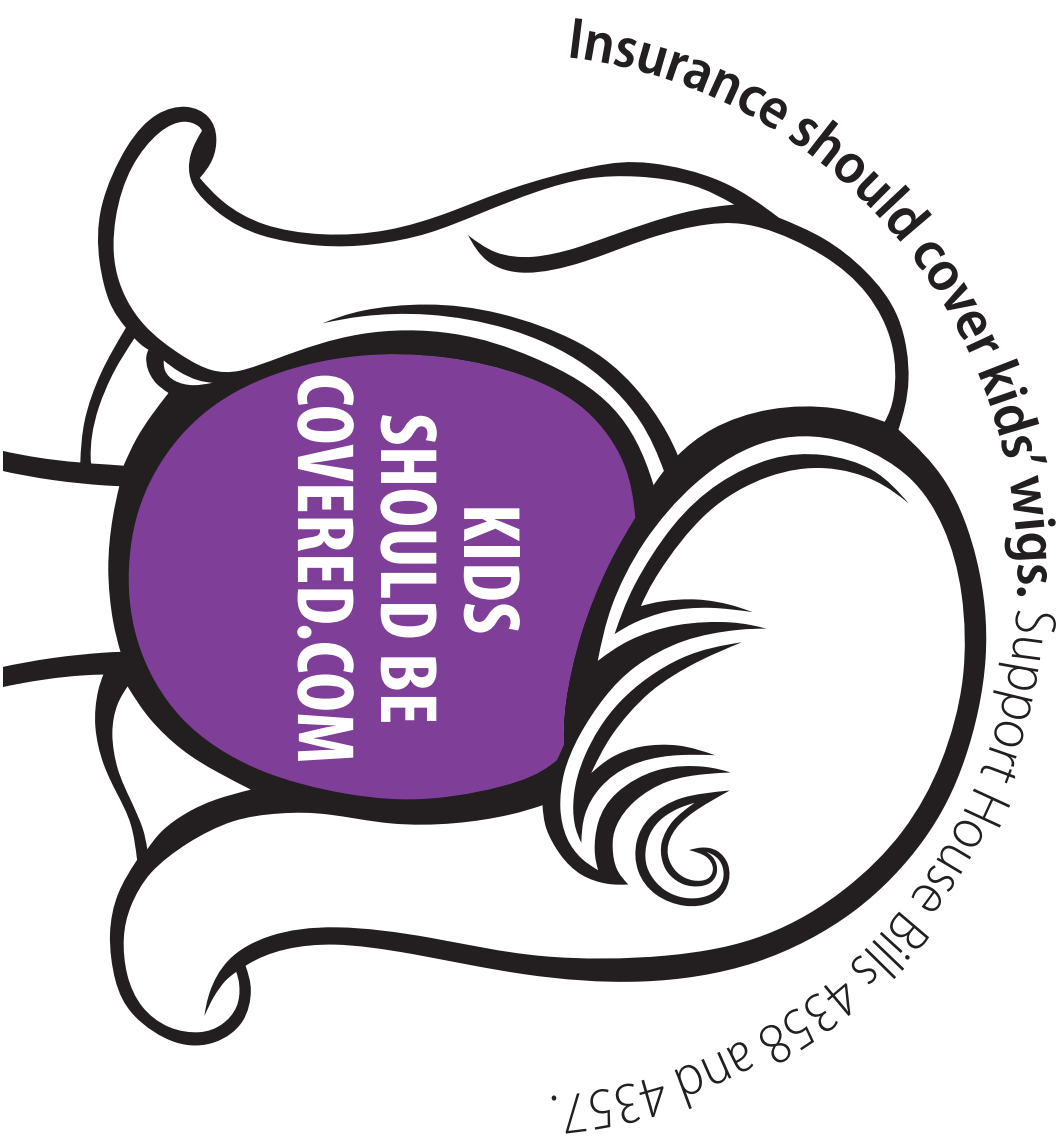

House Bill 4357, sponsored by Rep. Jon Hoadley (D-Kalamazoo), would mandate that Medicaid offer this same coverage for wigs for children.

This legislation is supported by Democrats and Republican representatives.

KIDS SHOULD BE COVERED!

“Insurance companies cover all kinds of prosthetics, but they don’t all cover the costs of a wig that is as important to a child’s recovery and self-esteem as any other prosthetic. While there are a number of groups that do amazing work to provide kids with wigs, these groups can’t be everywhere, and parents can’t always take their child to the organization. It’s time we require insurance to provide coverage for wigs so that no child who needs one has to go without.”

– State Representative Kevin Hertel

“Wigs can be expensive, with prices ranging from hundreds of dollars to thousands and that can put a wig out of reach for a family already dealing with the out-of-pocket costs of an illness or a medical condition. That is why, in addition to requiring insurance companies to cover wigs for kids, we also need Medicaid to cover this cost as well. No child should go without just because their parents don’t have insurance through their job. We need to make sure all of our children are covered regardless of family income.”

– State Representative Jon Hoadley
